WHEN SHE LEARNED THAT THE MURDER of her daughter Maureen had been freed, Vivian Hultman felt horror.

"I am embarrassed to be a Filipino. [What happened] is another example of misbehavior of justice in the Philippines," she said when she arrived in Sweden by plane yesterday.

Vivian said the Philippine government was disappointing her and her family by spreading "lies"—that they had been informed of the impending release of convicted slayer Clinton Teehankee Jr., and that they had accepted a Pardonment settlement with the latter's family.

"We had no clue at all. We only knew after he was released from jail," she said, adding that the "settlement" Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita mentioned on Tuesday had nothing to do with the Hultmans agreeing to the executive clemency granted Teehankee.

Third milk product from China positive for melamine

By Dore Fazzibon

A THIRD MILK PRODUCT FROM CHINA sold in the Philippines was found to be contaminated with the industrial chemical melamine, but health authorities seemed less worried about the extent of its effect on consumers.

"That is high because (the level) should be zero," Ms. Lourdes Santiago, officer in charge of the Bureau of Food and Drugs (BFD) laboratory service, said at a press conference at the Department of Health yesterday.

Health Secretary Francisco Duque III said Jolly Cox Shiner High Calicutan Low Fat Milk had already been withdrawn from store shelves.

At the same time, the BFD closed 21 dairy products, including some ice cream and chocolate products for being melamine-free.

Melamine-contaminated milk has

Global stock markets dive

US, 5 central banks cut interest rates

LONDON—GLOBAL stocks plunged to new depths in the financial vortex on Wednesday, with London shares falling nearly 6 percent after the Tokyo market came unhinged with its worst fall in more than 20 years.

In a new gambit to counter the global financial crisis, however, major central banks launched coordinated interest rate cuts on Wednesday.

The US Federal Reserve, the European Central Bank, Bank of England and central banks in China, Sweden and Switzerland all joined the new interest rate offensive, cutting rates by half a percentage point.

The banks highlighted as a joint statement that they had cooperated in "unprecedented joint actions such as the provision of liquidity to induce growth in financial markets" during the crisis.

Analysts said they expected the rate cut to breathe new life into battered stock markets in the United States and other major financial centers.

The coordinated action came

REYKJAVIK, ICELAND—NEEDED down by $180 billion in foreign debt owed by its top four banks, this volcanic island near the Arctic Circle is on the brink of becoming the first "nation of bankruptcy" of the global financial meltdown.

Home to just 320,000 people on a territory the size of Bermuda, Iceland has formidable international reach because of an unrelenting banking sector that set out with 18 days and drove to collapse much of the British economy—from fashion retailers to top soccer teams.

The strategy gave Icelandic banks one of the world's highest per capita incomes. But now, Icelanders are watching helplessly as their economy

Slowdown may be good for planet, says scientist

MOORE—A SLOWDOWN IN THE world economy may give the planet a breather from the excessively high carbon dioxide (CO2) emissions response. No for climate change, a Nobel Prize winning scientist said on Tuesday.

Atmospheric scientist Paul J. Crutzen, who has floated the possibility of blocking the atmosphere with sulfur particles to cool the Earth, said clouds gathering over the world economy could ease the planet's environmental burden.

Slower economic growth worldwide could help slow growth of carbon dioxide emissions and trigger more careful use of energy resources, though the

Analysts say Obama edged McCain in 2nd debate

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE—REPUBLICAN John McCain, arguably leading to win his campaign against, showed in a debate with Democratic Barack Obama over the causes and cures for a massive financial crisis that has frightened Americans and dented his prospects for winning the presidency.

Tuesday's debate, the second of three, came as polls show Obama leading in the crucial swing state of Iowa just two weeks before the Nov. 4 election. It also came as both campaigns exchanged blame of the latest round of stock market crashes.

Both candidates shed away from each other as they answered domestic and international policy questions from voters in the audience at Indiana University's event. They repeated many of the points they made in their Sept. 26 debate—but neither candidate landed any knockout blow. In that regard, Obama emerged from the debate with the advantage because time is running out for McCain to change the course of a race closely tracking Obama's way, according to analysts.

Obama, looking to beat McCain on President George W. Bush, described and items outside the hospital door for a payment for medical services.

The practice will flourish in the agricultural town although with a difference. Instead of seeking medical help from a village doctor seeking ideas, poor patients, and thousands of acres of vegetables in a medical center with none of these are equipment and facilities.

The town is famous for its kind such as vegetables which are given monetary value. The town is dedicated to the hospital bills of patients. The hospital needs to buy vegetables, improve the patients' meals, and for the hospital to use, said executive officer of San Juan Medical Center (SJMC).

These rules cannot bring farm produce more market before instead. "We want to ensure the jobs security. We want the poor patients to be able to have a source of responsibility," Amato said.

He said the management has given patients dignity as they must bring produce for the needs of the hospital's own setting.

"They can bring village items to clean the buildings and the surroundings in keeping the hospital clean, with such produce helping pay for the bills by working," Amato said.

The hospital is known for accepting payment in kind and services, thus patients reluctant to bring vegetables, fruits and fish and a career in the hospital's kitchen, laundry or in cleaning the buildings and grounds.

Last month, village officials and volunteer members of Barangay Concepcion in Bataan town cut weeds and grass and swept the hospital yard for half a day to thank the hospital administration for the needed services provided to their village units.

When Linda Quintana, a housewife, plant, underwear housewife, she paid P2,000 for the services. She said P2,000 is the rate for the village's services in pay for the operation.

The grandmother of 9-year-old child who lives near a quarry where the girl fell from a tree and broke her right arm is laundry this year.

The grandmother, Nene Inga, said one of the girl's relatives had been hospitalized.

Amato said that the hospital and laundry is a limited bill of about P20,000, including the professional fees of doctors from Manila.

How will the old women, who only receive money from laundry, pay?

"This is very poor but a more serious case. The management is not ready to pay for the expenses. The hospital vegetables from the farm is not sold," said Peter Manalang, a social worker who worked in the hospital.

Many people paid about P1,000 for the hospital's services and the balance of the bill was taken off by the hospital.

Since April 2002 when the hospital moved the services for poor patients, payment in kind or services had increased to P80,000, according to hospital records.

Qantas passengers tell tales of terror in the sky

STORY BY PHILIPPOUS TIGER
Tales of terror in the sky when their Qantas Airways plane suddenly plunged 10,000 feet over Australia, leaving travelers around the globe, causing fatalities, rescues and injuries.

An safety investigators said on Wednesday that instruments aboard the A330-300 seemed to glitch in the stabilization system just before the cockpit air-traffic controllers on Sunday's flight from Singapore to the western Australian city of Perth.

"It was for me, absolutely, absolutely horrendous, terrible, the worst experience of my life," passenger Jan Reed, of Perth, said.

He said he thought he was about to die as he watched as fellow passengers began flung around the cabin.

The plane, carrying 283 passengers and 10 crew, was on 37,000 feet and heading to destination when the incident occurred. It took an emergency landing in Low mouth, Western Australia, about 100 miles southeast of Perth.

More than 40 people were taken to hospitals for treatment, with 14 seriously injured.

Seven Air Transport Safety Bureau investigators were in Luxembourg to study the incident and have questioned the flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder. They will also interview the crew and passengers.

Qantas, which has been beset by a string of safety problems in recent months, said it was co-operating with the bureau and also conducting its own investigation.

John Walsh, director of the ATSB's aviation safety investigation, said separate the pilot received electronic message "relating to some irregularity with the aircraft's elevator control system," which helps keep the plane level in flight.

The aircraft then climbed approximately 300 feet before it "suddenly pitched nose down," Walsh said. It was unclear how the aircraft dropped.

Environmental factors

Walsh said environmental factors, such as turbulence, could also have been a factor and that it was "too soon to draw any conclusions as to the specific cause of this accident."

Investigators who were sent searching wreckage flew over the site, some taking the setting of the plane. Lower time-scattered throughout the cabin and over-whelmed baggage containers were seen.

"It was like a hurricane inside ... like a war zone," Keith Smith, from Lancashire, England, said. Smith said, "We of a sudden it dropped like a bomb, it was all over the place. It was like a roller coaster and a couple seconds later it fell again."

"There were screams and all the luggage was breaking, all over the place," he said. "It is an experience I wouldn't like to experience again."

Palin related to Princess Di?

NEW YORK—REP. BLACK VICE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE Sarah Palin is directly related to the late Princess Diana, genetics experts said on Wednesday.

The governor of Alaska and the princess are sixth cousins, said Anne Powell, online genealogist based in Irvine, Utah.

They both descended from John King and his wife Elizabeth Peet, genealogist Powell added.

King may have arrived 1685 in England and emigrated to the United States, where he died in Massachusetts in 1899, genealogist said. Genealogical connections say that the first to give a name to the US presidential campaign. Last year, Governor Palin said she found while visiting her family roots that her husband then President Dick Cheney was a distant cousin of Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama.

Other researchers discovered Obama is distant cousin with actor Brad Pitt.

UN council calls for action against Somalia piracy

GENEVA—The UN Security Council on Tuesday urged countries with naval ships deployed around the Horn of Africa to strengthen their policy of off the coast of Somalia.

The Council council passed a similar resolution in June that gave countries the right to actively conduct a range of ship-borne weapons and other threats to the region. The plan has continued to capture vessels in what is now one of the world's most dangerous shipping routes.

The highly bloody conflict, which the Council adopted unanimously, "calls upon States concerned in the security of maritime activities to take part actively in the fight against piracy on the high seas off the coast of Somalia, in particular by displaying naval research and military strength."

The new resolution has no time limit but otherwise differs little from the one passed in June.

Last month's capture of the Malaysian ship MV Tropic with 53 US troops aboard—this year's most deadly hijacking—prompted the resolution.

There have already scores of vessels hijacked, resulting in millions in ransom and putting up insurance rates for ships in the region.

disrupt the Indian economy

For the first time in 20 years, they are demanding 120 million. Other groups are looking after a dozen ships with some 300 crew members close to the Somali coast.

South African UN Ambassador Dlamini Zuma strongly criticized the French-led resolution, saying it was a stop-gap measure, because a few major powers were not involved with the plan. He said those powers were unwilling to deal with the root causes of the problem.

He said hijackings would continue until there is stability in Somalia, that stability would not come until the coastal reach piracy, which is seen as a threat to the security of the world's shipping routes.

"We just are across to ask a few lines," Zuma said, expressing concern about the new resolution.

UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon said he was in talks with countries that might offer troops to a UN peacekeeping mission but gave no details.

"We need to get to work on a plan to develop a viable multinational force to help secure a peace, or at the very least stability in people," he said.

Woman suicide bomber kills 9 outside courthouse

BAGHDAD—A WOMAN suicide bomber killed herself outside a courthouse today in the Iraqi capital on Wednesday, killing six security personnel and three civilians, officials said Wednesday.

Two Iraqi Army troops were among the victims killed while a policeman also died in the attack in Baghdad, capital of the Islamic province of Diyala, a security official said.

The attack was the main in Iraq since the 2003 invasion. It was the first in which 18 people were seriously injured in a suicide bombing.

The attack was in the city of the courthouse, near 100 meters north of Baghdad.

Layman Mohammed Tawfik said a woman dressed in traditional Islamic dress that covered her face from the nose, entered the court.

"I was going out to get photocopies. I saw a woman dressed in an abaya. As I stepped out she blew. She died," Tawfik said. "There was a police car and soldiers in the compound at the time."

The woman's attack was the worst suicide bombing in Iraq since the invasion. On Sept. 15 a woman outside Baghdad killed herself in a crowd of people during a rally, killing 33 people and wounding 94.

Obama, Bin Laden lose out in Brazilian local elections

BRASILIA—BARACK OBAMA, Bin Laden, Obama and Police Officer all failed in bids to win local elections held in Brazil on the weekend, officials here said.

Brazilian candidates who had been running under such widely recognized personalities as bin Laden in different parts of the country all found democracy as an impossible hurdle in elections, the Superior Electoral Court said.

In all cases there was no doubt by politicians who entered contest the name "Barack Obama" but some managed to secure a second term.

The so-called "Obama" naming of a local victory resulted in the election of the leader of the police.

A couple of "Obama" didn't seem as well with voters as French names. Instead, one Brazilian Obama won on the field. "Barack Obama" did pretty well in the other city of Rio de Janeiro, but ultimately couldn't win the city through the electoral system.

Reunion concert, UP style

A NIGHT OF FOLK SONGS, protest anthems, romantic ballads and fast-changing moods from the '60s, '70s and '80s is expected at the "FOR THOSE" reunion concert at Music Museum in Cincinnati, Feb. 29, 10 p.m. Tickets $10.

Familiar names evoking the "counterculture, bad old" era

Best days will perform in a hard-riding show for the University of the Philippines' faculty development program and the UP athletes.

The performers include Maria Angeles, Isabel Donesillo, Lily Sandoz, Helen Restolano and Evelyn Donesillo, who all come at Surabhi.

The house holds what used to be the Gilman golf course. Gilman and Digi Rancharo, Juan Fernandez, Achille Abou,
